studies on learning and teaching Chinese as a second language represents the current advances in the field. It showcases theoretically motivated empirical studies and diverse methods used for a better understanding of how Chinese language is acquired as a second or foreign language. This contributes to L2 acquisition research in general and L2 Chinese specifically. Furthermore, this research is useful for teachers seeking to understand their students' learning processes and adjust their pedagogical approach for more effective instruction. The book bridges the gap between research and instruction by providing pedagogical implications rooted in empirical findings.

Human behaviors are essential in understanding how individuals engage in medical science academic activities. Healthcare systems across the globe have witnessed a significant shift in recent years by integrating technology in innovating new methods and practices to improve educational practices. Therefore, pedagogical practices in medical sciences are expected to be consistent with the current developments so that medical students are prepared with the necessary skills when entering workplaces. In addition, the excessive use of technology has created severe concerns in the academic community that needs further investigation. Thus, it is crucial to know how teachers and students in medical sciences engage themselves in challenging behaviors, particularly in academic activities. This research topic aims to call for papers examining the influence of technology on human behavior in medical education. We invite researchers, practitioners, teachers, and students in all medical science disciplines to submit their research papers encompassing quantitative studies, qualitative studies, empirical case studies, mixed method studies, experimental research, and review studies. This research topic welcomes articles about but not only limited to the following topics: 1. Impact of technology on human behavior in medical professions teaching, 2. Impact of technology on human behavior in medical professions training and learning, 3. Effect of different social and psychological factors on healthy/unhealthy use of technology in medical sciences.

This edited book focuses on the state of language learning in anglophone countries and brings together international research from a wide range of educational settings taking a contextual perspective on the language learning crisis currently facing anglophone countries. The authors examine systemic challenges, real world practices, and broader cultural trends that have an impact on the uptake of modern foreign languages in different anglophone settings. This book will be of interest to scholars working in applied linguistics and language education, particularly those with a focus on educational policy and global English.
